The list of companies seeking payment for work performed for the Chicago Spire project continues to grow.

Late last month, Thornton Tomasetti, a New York-based firm with an office in Chicago, filed a mechanics lien against the project for $1.3 million for structural engineering design services it provided to the project.

The firm said it last worked on the Shelbourne Development Group Inc. project July 1.

The most well-known of the consultants, architect Santiago Calatrava, filed a lien on Oct. 8 through his Lente Festina Ltd., seeking more than $11.3 million in payment from Spire developer Shelbourne Development Group Inc.

Separately, Chicago-based architectural design firm Perkins+Will Inc. filed a lien against Shelbourne for almost $4.85 million in payment. The three liens were filed with the Cook County recorder of deeds.
